

How WestJet Achieved a 558% ROI

The Return on Investment from Training Their Managers in the Smarter Meetings System

---

The Investing in People Project

These results are reported in Investing in People, a three-year federally funded research study, to determine the quantifiable return on investment from corporate training to the bottom line. This groundbreaking study was conducted for the Canadian Society for Training and Development (CSTD) in 11 corporations, government departments and not for profit organizations from across Canada, by Lynette Gillis Ph.D. and Alan Bailey.

"The return on investment case studies will not only quantify the business benefits of workforce development but will provide the tools and the resulting best practices for Canadian employers to apply in their own organizations."
Lynn Johnston, President CSTD

The Study Results

The 558% return on investment to WestJet, from training team leaders in the Smarter Meetings management system, was the highest ROI, at the lowest cost, in the shortest time, of the 11 workforce development solutions assessed in the study.

The total cost to WestJet, for training the 82 managers who participated in the Smarter Meetings program, was $36,781.74. This included the costs of program development, the e-learning technology licenses from OneSmartWorld and the salaries for WestJet employees and facilitators involved in the training program. For every dollar invested, $6.58 was returned to WestJet in time saved, for a net annual gain of $242,169 or a 558% ROI. For information on the top 5 performance results from the study, see the second page of this document.
